State System ponders 'redesign,' approves new degrees at Clarion, Slippery Rock
Thursday, October 19, 2017
As the governing board for Pennsylvania's 14 state-owned universities met Thursday to ponder a "redesign" amid financial and enrollment woes, members approved new bachelor's degrees in respiratory care and in acting on two Western Pennsylvania campuses. The bachelor of science in respiratory care being added at Clarion University comes as the school is moving to boost emphasis on professional and workforce-driven programs. Slippery Rock University's new Fine Arts in Acting degree program will have as a major component acting, singing and dancing, something leaders said is pegged to forecast job growth in that field.

West Chester University Holds 4th Annual STOMPS Cancer Run
Monday, October 23, 2017
Our economy may be on the uptick, but there are still many families in this country whose finances are stressed beyond their means, and when those families find themselves facing a foe like cancer, the bills quickly mount. That's exactly why West Chester University brought the already-exciting 5K Stomp Cancer Run to their campus, originally formed from its parent non-profit organization, Bring Hope Home.
Report finds Pa. universities third most-expensive in nation

Wednesday, October 25, 2017

A new report paints a discouraging but familiar picture of college pricing in Pennsylvania, where some public universities warn of mid-year tuition hikes if their state appropriations do not materialize. Already this fall, average tuition rates at four-year public campuses are 45 percent above the national average, third highest of any state in the nation yet again, according to data released Wednesday by the College Board. The public four-year campuses in the College Board survey included the state-related schools and 14 state-owned universities of the State System of Higher Education that have their appropriations. The system’s base yearly tuition of $7,492 is less than half what many state-related students pay, though some system schools have switched to higher, per-credit tuition charges.
