State System universities' tuition is significantly less

Monday, October 30, 2017

The Oct. 26 editorial "Keystone Stakes: State Universities, Already Pricey, Can't Be Cut Loose" discusses the precarious situation involving higher education in Pennsylvania, pointing to a recent national report that indicates the state's public universities charge the third-highest tuition and fees in the United States. The problem with the report is that it combines Pennsylvania's state-owned universities — the 14 universities that constitute Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education — with the four so-called "state-related" universities, which also receive some state support. Pennsylvania is unique in this designation, which results in significantly skewed national comparisons such as those prepared annually by the College Board.

State grants for college students to decline for spring semester

Saturday, October 28, 2017

Some college students may have to pass up buying as much as a semester's worth of pizza this spring to offset a reduction in their state grant. Due to an unanticipated increase in the number of grant recipients, the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency is informing financial aid officers about the need to lower spring grant awards their students are receiving.
