

Entomology Club Insect Display

Chances are, you already have a well-founded personal opinion towards bugs one way or another. Many do appreciate them, but if you're on the fence about them, or despise them, then perhaps you just need a new perspective. Not all insects are created equal, but that certainly doesn't mean they're all 'creepy crawlies!'

This Friday, 3/31, from 11:00-3:00, come to Caputo Hall Lobby beside Caputo 210 to see for yourself a sample of the incredible diversity of insects as well as a close-up view of butterfly wings, one of the most common representations of beauty, rarely seen with such clarity. Some of Millersville University's very own collection will be on display. Stop by for a brief glance or stick around to find out more about the amazing world of tiny creatures.

If you have any questions about this activity, or the related club, please feel free to contact Courtland Hess (cchess@millersville.edu), the Entomology Club President.

Hope to see you there!
